An 'Alternative Medical System'

Editor:

More than 95 percent of the COVID-19 patients in our hospitals have not been vaccinated. The unvaccinated are putting a great deal of stress on our health care system; ICUs are overflowing and non-COVID medical procedures are having to be postponed. The flood of infectious COVID patients is causing space and staff shortages as well as staff burnout, making it difficult to carry out additional treatments such as infusing monoclonal antibodies.

Another major problem with only half the population immunized is that new variants of COVID-19 will probably be evolving. These new and potentially more dangerous variants could have an even greater impact on our hospitals. These variants will primarily come from the noses and mouths of the unvaccinated, not from China.

According to my modest proposal, anti-vaxxers would not be admitted to hospitals, (Jonathan Swift had the original modest proposal). Vaccine deniers would set up their own alternative medical system. One of the functions of this system would be to administer drugs not recommended by the mainstream medical community — hydroxychloroquine and Ivermectin, for example. This alternative health care system would be funded by legacies provided in the wills of deceased vaccine deniers.

Recently, in the South, three anti-vax talk show hosts died after being infected with the COVID-19 virus. Two of them recanted their anti-vax stance as death came near. If too many vaccine deniers rescind their anti-vaccine views when they realize they are mortally ill and drop out of the alternative medical system, the program may have financial problems. However, the escalating number of vaccine deniers dying will probably keep them in the black.

'Fear'

Editor:

The Maricopa County Arizona Election audit is finally over. An analysis and hand-recount of 2.1 million ballots uncovered only trivial discrepancies: Trump lost approximately 260 votes and Biden gained around 100 more. However, these results will likely be questioned as the amateur auditors, Cyber Ninjas, followed non-standard procedures.

Meanwhile, Trump and his allies are still encouraging new audits in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, both states which Biden won. And in Texas, after receiving a letter directly from Trump, Gov. Abbott is moving forward with a plan to audit Texas's four largest counties; this in a state that Trump clearly won.

What factor motivates these audits? It's not to change results, but rather to maintain doubt in the integrity of U.S. elections now and in the future.

It shouldn't take much. A recently completed CNN poll shows that even today, more than three-quarters of GOP voters and one-third of Independents do not believe Biden won enough votes legitimately in 2020 to be president.

This past presidential election resulted in a January insurrection ("Insurrection in the Capitol," Jan. 14). I fear what might happen in 2024 after Trump and his allies have three more years to revisit supposedly rigged elections and promote the "Big Lie" that Trump won.

Sherman Schapiro, Eureka

Editor:

On behalf of the sentient citizens of Humboldt County, let me be the first to extend my condolences to some Republicans regarding the Arizona 'Cyber Ninja' recount. The GOP-led effort actually found 99 more votes for Biden, and had to subtract 261 votes for former President Trump. Terrible development for those that allege the Trumpster won the vote. I think we can all sympathize with the disappointment they feel. In fact, I'm likely not the only reader that has a sick feeling in their stomach at this devastating development. I guess it could have been the KFC Fried Chicken Sandwich I had for lunch, but I'd like to think it is pity for crumbling world view of the election results deniers.

‘A Moment of Opportunity’

With two watersheds in crisis, a federal ruling sends a partnership back to the drawing board. Some think it’s for the best.

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

A multi-county, regional coalition of organizations bidding to take over Pacific Gas and Electric Co.’s Potter Valley Project didn’t get what it was asking for, but some believe that may be a good thing for the Eel River and the fish that depend on it.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) on Sept. 23 rejected a request from the Two Basin Partnership — a budding group that includes the counties of Humboldt and Mendocino, the nonprofit CalTrout, the Sonoma County Water Agency, the Mendocino County Inland Water and Power Commission and the Round Valley Indian Tribes — that sought more time to form a singular entity to take over the project from PG&E with an operating agreement that would benefit both Eel River and Russian River basin interests. On the surface, the ruling seemed to derail a years-long effort — spearheaded in large part by North Coast Congressman Jared Huffman — to forge what’s been dubbed the Two Basin Solution to advance fish restoration efforts on the Eel River while still diverting some of its water to communities to the south which have come to depend on it. But there’s also reason to believe FERC’s decision will actually serve to fast-track efforts to find a viable solution, one that brings increased flows and improved water quality to the Eel River and its beleaguered fish populations.

“We always knew that this would be a major challenge,” Huffman said in a Sept. 23 press release. “Today’s ruling by FERC is just a new chapter in seeking a Two Basin Solution, and I am committed to doing the hard work needed to achieve that end. This partnership and the stakeholders in the Eel and Russian river basins are strong and ready to take on this new challenge.”

While years of drought and dwindling salmon and steelhead populations have shifted the focus to water, the Potter Valley Project at its core is about electricity. In 1900, the Eel River Power and Irrigation Co. began construction on Cape Horn Dam on the Eel River about four miles north of the town of Potter

Valley, creating the van Arsdale Reservoir, as well as a one-mile tunnel that sent Eel River water down hill through a powerhouse before releasing it to the East Fork Russian River. But natural flows in the Eel River only allowed the project to operate in winter months, so the power company in 1920 began constructing a second, larger dam about 12 miles upriver from Cape Horn. Scott Dam, which formed Lake Pillsbury, created enough water storage capacity to control flows leading to Cape Horn, allowing the power company to generate electricity year-round. Recent decades, however, have seen endangered species protections obligate PG&E to keep more water in the Eel River. And the less water that gets diverted, the less electricity the project generates, making it less profitable to the company.

So a century after its construction, PG&E is looking to rid itself of the Potter Valley Project altogether and after trying unsuccessfully to sell it off, announced in January of 2019 that it would instead simply look to surrender its license, likely leading to its decommissioning.

Thus launched the Two Basin Partnership as a divergent group of stakeholders looked to band together to control their own interests, whether they be fishery restoration or continued water diversions.

“For the past couple of years, we’ve been trying to do all the studies, figure out how all this would really work and how it would be managed,” Craig Tucker, a project consultant for the county of Humboldt, told the Journal, explaining that the parties agreed on a basic framework that would remove Scott Dam — which blocks 100 miles of salmon and steelhead spawning grounds and he dubbed “the biggest problem for fish” — and shift water diversions to winter months, when they would be less impactful on fish populations. “That was the concept.”

The trip line is that FERC requires a host of costly environmental studies for a license transfer application and the Two Basin Partnership was unable to come up with the estimated $18 million needed for the process. And time is running out, as PG&E’s project license expires in April. FERC had already waived application timelines to allow the partnership to submit an application by the date of the license’s expiration but it still needed more time and, on Sept. 2, asked for another extension. Not everyone was on board with the request.

A week later, Friends of the Eel River (FOER) issued a press release stating that while it had supported the Two Basin effort up to that point, it had become evident to the environmental nonprofit that partnership’s re-licensing efforts would not succeed. As such, FOER had come to believe the license surrender and decommissioning process would be the “surest and quickest” way to get the dams removed.

“Eel River fisheries are in crisis,” FOER Executive Director Alicia Hamann said in a press release. “The project operations jeopardize the continued survival of Eel River Chinook salmon and steelhead, which are both listed under federal Endangered Species Act as threatened.”

Removal of Scott Dam is essential if Northern California summer steelhead, listed as endangered by the state of California, “have any real hope of recovery,” the press release contended, urging the Two Basin Partnership to withdraw its notice of intent to relicense the project.

While the partnership hasn’t withdrawn its notice — Tucker says the group has yet to meet to officially discuss FERC’s Sept. 23 decision and next steps — it seems clear the partnership’s efforts to form a new regional entity to take over the dams’ license are doomed.

“We simply don’t have the time or the money needed to do the license application,” Tucker said. “I think we’ll be forced to contemplate how this partnership can interact with PG&E in the surrender scenario.”

But the coalition remains, as Huffman indicated, and its focus will now likely shift to how it can achieve something resembling its Two Basin Solution through PG&E’s license surrender and decommissioning process.

One possible scenario would be the creation of a new entity that would own and operate Cape Horn Dam and its water diversion apparatus, but that would likely require rights for that entity to sell the water to Russian River Basin interests in order to pay infrastructure and operational costs, and the willingness of those receiving Eel River water to pay for it.

Tucker said there remains “a lot of motivation” to address what is now a regional water crisis, noting that the South Fork Eel River recently ran dry before its confluence with the river’s main stem for the first time in history, that the main stem looks “pretty awful” and some Russian River communities are already relying on bottled water.

“I do think the parties will stick together,” he said. “If you’ve got a regional coalition, that’s what you need to be able to ask for federal and state dollars. The only way to solve big problems is to have big, diverse coalitions. ... I do think there’s a big opportunity here. Whenever a dam license expires, it is a moment of opportunity to make some change for the better.”

Students Walkout to Support Sexual Assault Survivors

Students walked out of class on at least three Humboldt County high school campuses shortly after classes began Sept. 27 to stand in solidarity with survivors of sexual assault.

Most wearing white and many holding signs, students at Fortuna, Eureka and McKinleyville high schools participated in the planned walkouts, with Fortuna and McKinleyville students marching the streets surrounding their campuses.

The walkouts come after two separate reports of sexual assault — one involving students at Fortuna High School and the other involving students of another local high school. In a report published Sept. 26, Kym Kemp, an independent local reporter based in Southern Humboldt, details the story of a 15-year-old Fortuna High School student who says she was sexually assaulted by a drunken fellow student who is on the football team shortly after midnight Aug. 8 during a party at Centerville Beach, leaving her “sobbing.”

The student and her mother told Kemp the assault was reported to Fortuna High School staff by a friend but the staff member did not take action because the friend didn’t identify the student who’d been assaulted. District Superintendent Glen Senestraro later told Kemp, “When the school was made aware of these allegations, it is our district policy to notify law enforcement,” and that the Humboldt County Sheriff’s Office is investigating.

Kemp reported that the student said she personally reported her allegations to the sheriff’s office on Sept. 23.

In an email responding to an inquiry from the Journal, sheriff’s office spokesperson Samantha Karges confirmed an investigation is underway but declined to provide additional details.

“I can confirm that sheriff’s deputies are conducting an investigation into a reported sexual assault occurring early August at Centerville Beach,” she wrote. “Due to the sensitive nature of this case and the involvement of juveniles, we are unable to share any information regarding this investigation at this time.”

The student’s friends reportedly began planning a walkout at Fortuna High School when they felt the school wasn’t taking appropriate action and the incident was being swept “under the rug.” Having heard about Fortuna students’ plans, a group of cheerleaders at Eureka High School began organizing a similar walkout in solidarity, saying they knew of another incident in which a different local school had failed to support a student who reported having been sexually assaulted by a fellow student. McKinleyville students then also joined in solidarity. All three walkouts began simultaneously Sept. 27.

In McKinleyville, a group of about 50 students walked off campus waving signs scrawled with messages like, “No Means No,” “Cleavage is Not Consent, Drunk is Not Consent, A Mini Skirt is Not Consent, Alone is Not Consent,” “Stop Victim Blaming,” “Refuse to be Silenced” and “What Causes Rape? A skirt? A drink? Flirting? RAPISTS.” The group marched from campus east on Murray Road before turning down Central Avenue and briefly rallying on a corner across from McKinleyville Middle School before returning to campus.

Sally Arnot's legacy of local arts fundraising (1938-2021)

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

“Boats at Harbor” has a familiarity about it, both as Humboldt scenery and as subject matter for local watercolor paintings. A trio of boats flank a small dock rendered in earth tones, with sharper lines tracing the masts and the edges of the boats and layers of deepening green for what looks like Woodley Island in the background. The strokes loosen in the water, depicted in chartreuse and blues, a light patch of which bears Sally Arnot's pencil-fine signature.

Jemima Harr, executive director-curator of the Humboldt Arts Council and its Morris Graves Museum of Art, was surprised to find the painting by her former boss, who died Sept. 15, for sale online through Etsy. Despite Arnot's decades-long career with the council and as a central figure in Humboldt's art community — her blond, then silver bob and power suits fixtures in meeting rooms and galleries, alike — it seems not many people knew she'd done any painting herself.

“I think what it really boiled down to was her passion was not in creating but promoting and supporting the arts,” says Harr. “It was more for everyone else ... the museum is for everyone.”

The Morris Graves Museum of Art is the clearest manifestation of that support, housed as it is in the stately classical revival-style Carnegie Library, the restoration and renovation of which were funded largely through her fundraising efforts.

Even after stepping back from the HAC board as an emeritus member and leaving the area at the age of 82 to be close to her family in Lake Oswego, Oregon, Arnot continued to put her energies toward the MGM from afar. She was still talking to Harr almost daily, getting updates and coming up with ideas, until she suffered a stroke in her home on Sept. 6. Harr says, “This was her heart and soul, and something she was thinking of every day.”

Born and raised in Eureka, Arnot graduated from Eureka High School in 1956 and married Philip Arnot the following year. According to their son Stephen, “My parents met when my mom was working at the Eureka Theater, which was next door to the Carnegie Library, now the Morris Graves Museum. My dad had gone to the movies and she was working the concession stand. Phil asked her if he could drive her home after work. Sally said, ‘I already have a ride home tonight but you can take me home tomorrow night.’” In nine months, they were married and remained so until her death 63 years later.

The couple spent five years in San Francisco while Philip worked and completed a law degree. There, as her friends and family tell it, she fell in love with the city and its cultural attractions, particularly the museums. When they returned to Humboldt for Philip's work as an attorney, it was with the promise that they would travel and see the world beyond the rural county where she grew up. This they did, setting foot in 50 countries over the years.

In a profile in the Journal ("Sally Arnot: Cheerleader for the Arts," Dec. 30, 1999), Arnot is asked about the importance of art, to which she replies: "I think it raises your spirit. It's good for your soul. The importance of art — I remember one time Morris Graves said this, and it's so true — 'Everything that we touch in our lives began with an artist.'" She continues, "Artists designed cars, artists are architects who build houses, our clothing is an art work. ... I think the way you live, the way you dress, everything has to do with your artistic nature."

Stephen Arnot says it was a perspective that manifested in their daily home life. "She believed having art in your life made life more interesting and joyful," he says. "She believed being creative and surrounding yourself with art you loved made life better ... . My older brother Mike and I grew up surrounded by the beautiful work of local Humboldt County artists. Our home was like an art gallery filled with paintings from floor to ceiling. Our dishes were Kathy Pierson's pottery, and Stan Bennett, Mel Schuler and Hobart Brown's sculptures were in our living room."

Those who visited the Arnot home on Quaker Street in Eureka remark on the salon-style arrangement of art on its walls, which were covered with works by local artists and pieces acquired in the Arnots' travels. "Buying it was and still is the only way to support artists," says Harr, "and she was a proud collector."

In 1970, four years after Humboldt State University professor Homer Balbanis founded the HAC, Sally Arnot joined its board of directors. When the Humboldt Cultural Center, operating under the HAC, found its home in the E. Janssen Building on First Street in Old Town Eureka, she was very much at its helm, overseeing exhibitions, lectures and concerts.

Artist Jack Sewell recalls meeting Arnot in the mid-1970s. "I was just getting my feet wet" in the local scene and setting up shows at the HCC for the Redwood Art Association, he says. "She really was the central person in the art community. Her and [artist] Floyd Bettiga."

It was an impression that stuck, even after the MGM was established.

"She was certainly the boss, the top of the ladder," Sewell says. "There were several directors that came and went over the years but Sally was the final answer. ... She was very effective and kind of defined her own job description as she went along."

Ink People Center for the Arts co-founder Libby Maynard met Arnot in 1984, when Maynard was hired on as the arts coordinator for the California Arts Council State and Local Partnership. Arnot was executive secretary then, a title Maynard says should have been executive director. "That was one of those gender things," she says.

"She was a good talker and a good asker," Maynard says of Arnot. "'Cause, you know, in the nonprofit world, if you don't ask, you don't get.'" She adds that Arnot was good at recognizing personal initiative and checking in on progress, and that she was a believer in art as an economic driver. "In any kind of organization, it takes an individual agenda to move it forward ... you get strong individuals who make things happen. The trick is to set it up so it'll continue after they're gone."

Maynard herself served on the board and briefly as executive director of the HAC but, as a self-described “rabble rouser,” sees ways in which she wasn’t such a fit in aesthetics or vision. “Think of it like an arts ecology. There are ecological niches. Ink People is the on-the-ground grassroots organization. And the HAC is the patrons’ organization.” Arnot was especially suited to the latter by dint of her persuasive charm, connections and drive. Asked if she ever witnessed anyone saying no to Arnot, Maynard laughs. “I’m sure people did but I didn’t see it,” she says.

Arnot’s gift of getting people to give would be tested when a required seismic retrofitting of the E. Janssen Building meant the cultural center would have to move. The city of Eureka’s offer to sell the Carnegie Library, shuttered for two decades, for a nominal price would have been a simple fix had it not come with the massive costs of retrofitting and renovation. The HAC would need to raise close to $1 million to make it work.

Arnot went after the money in donations large and small, starting with the Brick Buy Brick program, through which patrons could pay $65 for a brick engraved with their names to be installed on the grounds. She continued hitting up people at Eureka club meetings and in her social circle. Prominent local artists and business owners ponied up. A special edition of The Palette magazine honoring Arnot lists “the Arkleys, Schmidbauers, Bill Pierson, the Eureka Rotary Club and the Kresge Foundation” as “large contributors.” Anchoring those names is Morris Graves, for whom the museum is named.

Robert Yarber, who runs the Morris Graves Foundation with his wife, Désiree, and who worked for the late artist for 28 years before his death, says Graves met Arnot through the HAC. Graves, an internationally renowned painter, had relocated to Humboldt and had his first local exhibition at the HCC. Over the years, he would have three shows with the HAC.

Graves’ contribution to the Carnegie building effort came in the form of both money and art from his collection, including some of his own pieces. “They were looking for someone who would donate close to $1 million [in cash and art] for the naming,” says Yarber, and Graves and the foundation obliged. When the museum opened in 2001, it held a major exhibition of Graves’ work.

“I think Morris respected Sally for her dedication to the arts and the community,” says Yarber. “He felt that they would respect the art and it would give their permanent collection more strength on an international level from a semi-famous artist of the 20th century and he wanted to do it as a show of friendship with them.”

Yarber himself served on the HAC board for several years during the transition to the Carnegie Building, working closely with Arnot. “I always appreciated just her positive energy, and her focus on the goal and what needed to be done for the community,” he says. “She could bring a wide variety of people together and accommodate their differences.”

That sentiment is echoed by Sanderson Morgan, a former HAC board member who most recently curated the Seven Artists, Seven Paths group exhibition at the museum.

“She knew her constituency and she bridged the academic side and the other side that liked the idea of supporting the arts,” he says of Arnot. “She was instrumental in bringing parts of our culture here together,” one side creative and scholarly, and the other moneyed and political. “She and I were poles apart in our world view,” he says, as Arnot and her husband’s social circle were politically conservative, “but we had a good working relationship.”

The two met in 1980 when he was teaching at the Humboldt State University Art Department, where she was pursuing the art history degree she’d put off when she got married and would finish two years later. He says they became friends instantly and she invited him to show at the cultural center and, it seems, he was no more capable of refusing than anyone else. “I brought some watercolors that I would never have shown but she asked me, so I did it.”

While Arnot’s bridging of those worlds was a monetary success, some in the arts community felt reliance on wealthy, conservative donors, as well as Arnot’s own vision and aesthetics, led to exhibitions that played it safe with established, apolitical artists. There was criticism, too, in the early years of the museum, over its lack of inclusion of work by women and artists of color.

But by and large, despite her husband’s involvement in politics, which extended to radio commentary on KINS and a column in the now defunct Eureka Reporter, Arnot herself kept politics separate from her work in the arts. “It’s not really a party-line thing,” says Maynard of the business of fundraising for the arts. “There may be differences in the kind of art [people] like or approve of, but generally art crosses boundaries. ... It’s one of the hopes I have for this country.”

Karen Angel, a museum advisory board member and Arnot’s friend since the 1980s, recalls Arnot showing up for lunches at Angel’s home with a box of pastries from Ramones. They would open a bottle of wine and chat about art, the arts council and Arnot’s children and grandchildren. “She was so very proud of them and just talked and talked about her grandchildren and their adventures,” Angel says.

She describes Arnot as “a joyous person who had a mission.” Obstacles encountered in the course of that mission didn’t seem to get her down, either. “Things took longer than she thought they would but ... she wasn’t a person, in my experience with her, that ever showed outward frustration or anger. Because tomorrow is a new day.” Even the macular degeneration that, in the last few years, made it a struggle to see the art she loved so much didn’t lead Arnot to despair. “For a person so visually oriented, the loss of her vision must have been cataclysmic but I never heard her complain about it,” Angel says. “It was never, ‘Woe is me.’”

And like a number of people interviewed by the Journal, Angel was awed by Arnot’s drive and powers of persuasion. “If anyone said no to her, I don’t know who it was," she says. "She kept pursuing."

Harr met Arnot while applying for an exhibitions coordinator position at the MGM 17 years ago at Stanton's Diner in Eureka, now long gone. "I could sense a mile away that she was a powerhouse," says Harr, who started out curating the San Francisco Airport museums — a dream experience in some ways, but one geared to visitors coming and going, not anchored. After working as collections manager and acting director of the University of California at Davis' Richard L. Nelson Gallery, she came to Humboldt, where she made a home for herself with a mentor who believed in her.

Once on board with the HAC, Harr was amazed at Arnot's complete lack of hesitation walking up to someone at a Rotary meeting and suggesting they fund, say, a new computer for the museum. "She was an asker," Harr says, adding that over the years she heard many people say, "You can't say no to Sally Arnot."

"And you can't," Harr says. "You couldn't."

Back then, with the museum established in its new home after the herculean lift of the renovation and retrofit, the HAC coffers were nearly depleted, with some $20,000 in the bank. Arnot, who'd already served as HAC president and become an emeritus member (always unpaid), had stepped away from her role on the board but returned to the board and to volunteer for regular 40-hour weeks to build back the organization's resources.

"She sent me to grant writing courses," says Harr. "She knew kind of more about me than I knew about me at that time and she invested in me." In 2015, after operating at a deficit, the HAC sold six paintings by Indian artist V.S. Gaitunde from Morris Graves' donated collection. After Bonhams Fine Art Auctioneers took its commission, the council was left with $1 million with which to establish an endowment. That money, according to Harr, remains untouched and the day-to-day operations are paid for with shoe-leather fundraising, grant writing and the earned income of the gift shop and admissions. That means hitting 7 a.m. Sunrise Rotary meetings to talk about the arts council, running three-day trips to the Los Angeles County Museum of Art and hosting appraisal fairs with Harr's mother donating her expertise on antiques. Those fundraisers, Harr says, serve the dual purpose of gathering cash and connecting with the community.

Like most nonprofits and arts organizations, the HAC has been hit hard by the pandemic, as attendance has dropped, events are canceled and donors themselves feel the economic impact. But as nonprofits go, Harr says, the organization and the museum that Arnot poured her energy into are in a good place.

"We have a strong future," she says. "As a friend and a longtime colleague of Sally's, I'm not gonna let her down." ●

What's Good Roundup

Western Mexican and a café
 with a difference

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

Las Michoacanas' Regional Redo

Muscle memory still brings the odd patron to Las Michoacanas (1111 Fifth St., Eureka) thinking it's still Rita's. Don't feel bad for them. New co-owners Socorro Sanchez and Perla Sanchez (no relation) have made themselves at home with a full bar (no margarita mix, just the real thing made to order) and a menu with Western Mexican specialties that reflect both women's Michoacán roots.

Those looking for tacos, burritos and enchiladas will find them alongside regional takes. For the enchiladas Michoacanas, the action is on the outside, with a mere swipe of red sauce and cotija cheese inside three homemade corn tortillas that are cooked in sauce and topped with carrots, potatoes, chopped cabbage, tomatillo sauce and more cotija, as well as a curl of crunchy cecina, flash-fried dried beef. The cecina, says Socorro, a Humboldt native, is sourced from the Bay Area but a must-have when visiting the Mexican state from which her family hails.

"Tacos ahogados, morisqueta, everywhere you go there's little booths that sell that," says Socorro. Perla cooks up both in the kitchen. The tacos ahogados make for a light appetizer — a trio of crispy fried mini tortillas filled with shredded chicken or beef and topped with cabbage and a loose salsa of tomatoes, onions and chiles. Douse them in the accompanying creamy orange sauce, which is a brighter, tangier showcase than usual for the smoke of chipotle.

The morisqueta is the heartiest, homiest option. Hunks of pork on the bone are cooked in a tart tomatillo sauce with just enough heat to warm your cheeks, then scooped over soft white rice with rich, scratch-cooked pinto beans. The brimming container is tricky to carry out but you'll be grateful to hunker down in the privacy of your own home and use your fingers to get every last morsel.

Back to the Grind

A moment of appreciation for grab-and-go coffee shops. There, early risers are accommodated and those of us who struggle with morning are soothed without fuss. There, the good people at the counter prep for the breakfast rush and brew hot coffee while many of us turn in our covers, thinking of reasons not to get up just yet. Nowhere is that succor more urgently needed than across from an institution like the courthouse.

In July, Gaby Long, proprietress and chef at A Taste of Bim, bought the Grind Cafe (734 Fifth St.), with its front window view of Blake Reagan's floaty trompe l'oeil mural alongside the Humboldt County Courthouse. It remains a solid stop for a hot Humboldt Bay Coffee Co. latte and a bagel, but scan the full menu before you order your usual.

"We're keeping some of the traditional things, like we do the soups and the focaccia bread for paninis," but, says Long, "we have a little splash of island, like the plantains." The breakfast sandwich, for example, has soft scrambled eggs and cheese on an English muffin with jammy bits of plantain and curry aioli. "Back in the Caribbean, you eat a lot of plantain for breakfast. It's a healthy food and ... the sweetness really melds with the savory," says Long. If you're not already on board with plantains for breakfast, allow yourself to be converted.

The plantains return at lunch beside paninis in the form of chips and atop a crispy, made-to order flatbread with a layer of hummus, baby spinach and sautéed mushrooms and peppers. There are pizza and barbecue flatbreads, too, but the veggie turns what's essentially a salad into party food, which is an achievement to be celebrated.

The treats in the case are made on the premises, and you can't go wrong with a cinnamon or chocolate muffin. Hardcore sweet tooths and lovers of white chocolate might look to the hefty oat bars, which break open like geodes to reveal a layer of white chips under their crumb topping. The coffee list is standard, with espresso drinks and shakes. If you're not here to caffeinate, consider the pineapple ginger refresher, with its light fizz, house-pressed juice and the zing of fresh ginger.

Long says by early October there should be beer and wine on the menu, meaning mimosas for Saturday brunches of biscuits and gravy and wine with charcuterie boards. ●

Rough Seas Curtail Pacific Halibut Bite

When the ocean has been fishable, the Pacific halibut have been chomping baits at a pretty good clip out of Eureka. Most of the charters and sport boats still fishing are scoring their one-fish-apiece limit. The biggest detriment has been the weather. Large swells have been the norm over the past few weeks, limiting the fleet to just a day here and there on the water. When the stars do align, the fishing has been very good. "There's plenty of fish out there," said Tim Klassen of Reel Steel Sport Fishing. "Most of the action has been in the same general area, between the 49 and 54 lines in 200 to 300 feet of water." According to Klassen, the majority of the fish are running between 10 and 20 pounds, but a few bigger fish have shown up. The top baits have been herring along with salmon and tuna bellies. Rough ocean conditions are in the forecast at least through the end of the week. The good news is with no fishing, the quota will last longer. The halibut fishery will run through Nov. 15, or until the quota is reached, whichever is earlier. As of Sept. 12, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife estimated 26,118 net pounds of Pacific halibut had been harvested toward the 39,260-pound quota. To view the latest catch projection information, visit www.wildlife.ca.gov/Conservation/Marine/Pacific-Halibut#31670772-in-season-tracking.

Recreational crab regulation changes for 2021

The California Fish and Game Commission adopted new regulations for the recreational crab fishery in 2021. The revised regulations include the following new requirements when fishing with crab traps:

- A standardized buoy and additional red buoy marker for each trap
- All crab traps must be serviced at least every nine days
- A Recreational Crab Trap Validation is required when fishing crab traps
- A limit of 10 traps per person

Also note that the CDFW director can now implement a season delay or early season closure due to marine life entanglement risk. Notices of delay or closure will be posted on the CDFW's Whale Safe Fisheries web page at least five days before any delay or closure. The Dungeness season is expected to reopen on Nov. 6. Crabbers can also sign up to receive important season information and updates on the web page. The new regulations are in effect beginning Nov. 1.

The Recreational Crab Trap Validation can now be purchased at www.wildlife.ca.gov/Licensing/Fishing as well as from other approved license sales agents. For more information on regulations changes, visit www.nrm.dfg.ca.gov/FileHandler.ashx?DocumentID=195067&inline.

The Oceans:

Eureka

Rough ocean conditions have kept the boats tied up since Monday and it looks like more of the same all week. The Pacific halibut bite remains solid between the 49 and 54 lines, weather permitting. According to Klassen, the rockfish action near Cape Mendocino was tougher than usual over the weekend. "There's still lots of blacks but not big numbers of the other species," he said. "The ling cod bite wasn't that great, either. The ocean conditions could have put them off the bite."

Shelter Cove

The rockfish bite was great all week, according to Jake Mitchell of Sea Hawk Sport Fishing. "We made it up to Rodgers break in marginal conditions and did really good for a couple days," he said. "The weather finally laid down enough for us to get up to Gorda on Sunday, and we had limits of rockfish and lings along with four Pacific halibut. We fished for salmon for about a total of eight hours this week and landed seven fish to 27 pounds right out front inside of the whistle."

Crescent City

According to Britt Carson of Crescent City's Englund Marine, tuna were caught last weekend 40 miles from the harbor. "Since Sunday, the ocean has been really rough," he said. "When the boats can get out, the rockfish and lingcod bite is still excellent. The California halibut are pretty much done."

The Rivers:

Lower Klamath

Salmon fishing slowed slightly late last week, as the mouth was reportedly sanded over. The fishing picked up on Sunday, with jacks and some adults caught between Starwein and Blue Creek. With more than an inch of rain on Monday and flows jumping up 400 cubic feet per second, there should be plenty of fish moving through the mouth into the lower river.

Fall has arrived and nothing says the season of spookiness and spice is upon us like a trip to the pumpkin patch. Discover more beautiful fall colors this weekend at Pastels on the Plaza on Saturday, Oct. 2 and Sunday, Oct. 3 around the Arcata Plaza (free to view). This annual benefit for Northcoast Children's Services sees more than 100 artists representing local businesses and organizations sponsoring chalk drawings of brightly colored scenes in squares around the plaza. In years past, you had to catch these masterpieces, like Bert and Mary Poppins, before the rain washed them away. This season, they may linger a bit longer.

Impeachment's Time Capsule

By David Jervis

screens@northcoastjournal.com

AMERICAN CRIME STORY: IMPEACHMENT.

Just a few years can make one hell of a difference and 23 years can be like a lifetime — roughly the length of a generation. And from the 1998-1999 scandal-ridden impeachment of President Bill Clinton, it sure feels like a vast gulf from there to the present day.

Airing on FX Tuesday nights through Nov. 9 and streaming on Hulu, American Crime Story: Impeachment is the third go-round from showrunner/guru Ryan Murphy, who has taken a break from his cult audience-earning horror entertainments to follow in the footsteps of previous ACS limited series as 2016's masterful, Emmy-winning series about the trial of O.J. Simpson and 2018's hey-not-bad one about Gianni Versace's murder.

Even if there are among you readers those young enough not to remember what was commonly called “the Lewinsky scandal,” among other things, I'll assume you are familiar with the matter that rocked the Clinton presidency for roughly 13 months of his second term. That it was the first presidential impeachment to go to trial in 131 years is of note but, like those before and since, it ended in acquittal. The series, four episodes in so far out of a total of 10, has wisely chosen to focus on the arcs of two women: Monica Lewinsky and Tinda Tripp.

Lewinsky is played by Beanie Feldstein, who disappears perfectly into the role of an early-20s, straight-out-of-college intern who got ground up in a power dynamic. Tripp, played by a nearly unrecognizable Sarah Paulson (excellent as always), is a career civil servant who has worked very, very hard in the upper echelons of D.C. Despite the fact that Tripp is established as a nightmarish white-collar co-worker — one who's upset by everything from misplaced yogurt containers to bad toner cartridges — one initially feels some empathy for her as a middle-aged woman who feels that she simply deserves better in the massive D.C. bureaucracy.

That Tripp will turn out to be possibly the worst and most disingenuous work friend imaginable is another wrinkle, but the early episodes give it all plenty of context. And When Lewinsky becomes a coworker of Tripp's (they meet in late 1996, newly transferred from the White House to office work at the Pentagon), she is young, trusting, hopeful, friendly but also intelligent. Though through very different circumstances from Tripp, there's some similarity in her getting caught up in something beyond her control.

Lewinsky, of course, is dragged into the very public eye thanks to a workplace affair with a charismatic, manipulative, powerful older man, in this case Clinton (played here with unctuous, deft detail by Clive Owen, not letting his roots in Coventry keep him from nailing the Arkansas accent). And thanks to Ken Starr, in what even he and his attorneys would eventually admit was probably (duh) a misstep, the scandal is dragged into the open in salacious detail.

Throughout 1998, Lewinsky was subjected to jokes from late night talk show hosts about her looks and weight, and Tripp found herself played by John Goodman in drag on Saturday Night Live. We like to think we have changed for the better but it wasn't so long ago. Still, some particulars of the case can come out of the foggy past like ephemera from a different era. (Wait, Lewinsky worked at the Pentagon? What exactly did Michael Isikoff do again? Paula Jones' husband was trying to launch his acting career?)

American Crime Story: Impeachment is imperfect but it's close to nailing how the whole 13-month national episode — with plenty of months of rumbling run-ups — reflected the era and built the one we're in now. We get things like Matt Drudge (a perfectly cast Billy Eichner) digging through the dumpster after a shift at his mid-90s job at the CBS Studio Store in Burbank, then going home to glean gossip from crumpled faxes and post online from his dial-up modem. For political junkies, there are trenchant portrayals of young Ann Coulter, Laura Ingraham and George Conway.

Impeachment is sharply on point in its entertainment and facts. While nowhere near the blunt reckoning about race and the legal system as was the previous ACS installment about the Simpson case, it's still enough to make you look back at those 13 months and ask, “What the hell good did that do anyone?” TVMA. 42M. FX, HULU.

In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that JOHN JANE ELISABETH OLSON be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court. ### NCJ ASTROLOGY

Free Will Astrology Week of Sept. 30, 2021

By Rob Breznsy

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Blogger AnaSophia was asked, "What do you find attractive in a person?" I'll reproduce her reply because it's a good time to think about what your answer would be. I'm not implying you should be looking for a new lover. I'm interested in inspiring you to ruminate about what alliances you should cultivate during the coming months. Here's what AnaSophia finds attractive: "strong desire but not neediness, passionate sensitivity, effortlessness, authenticity, innocence of perception, sense of humor, vulnerability and honesty, embodying one's subtleties and embracing one's paradoxes, acting unconditionally and from the heart."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Taurus author Roberto Bolaño confessed, "Sometimes I want greatness, sometimes just its shadow." I appreciate his honesty. I think what he says is true about most of us. Is there anyone who is always ready for the heavy responsibility of pursuing greatness? Doubtful. To be great, we must periodically go through phases when we recharge our energy and take a break from being nobly ambitious. What about you, dear Taurus? If I'm reading the omens correctly, you will benefit from a phase of reinvention and reinvigoration. During the next three weeks, you'll be wise to hang out in the shadows of greatness.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): "Have fun, even if it's not the same kind of fun everyone else is having," wrote religious writer C. S. Lewis. That advice is ten times more important right now than it usually is. For the sake of your body's and soul's health, you need to indulge in sprees of playful amusement and blithe delight and tension-relieving merriment. And all that good stuff will work its most potent magic if it stimulates pleasures that are unique to you—and not necessarily in line with others' tastes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): "It is one thing to learn about the past," wrote Cancerian journalist Kenneth Auchincloss. "It is another to wallow in it." That's stellar advice for you to incorporate in the coming weeks. After studying your astrological omens, I'm enthusiastic about you exploring the old days and old ways. I'm hoping that you will discover new clues you've overlooked before and that this further information will inspire you to re-envision your life story. But as you conduct your explorations, it's also crucial to avoid getting bogged down in sludgy emotions like regret or resentment. Be inspired by your history, not demoralized by it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Would you like to deepen and strengthen your capacity to concentrate? Cosmic rhythms will conspire in your favor if you work on this valuable skill in the coming weeks. You'll be able to make more progress than would normally be possible. Here's pertinent advice from author Harriet Griffey: "Whenever you feel like quitting, just do five more—five more minutes, five more exercises, five more pages—which will extend your focus." Here's another tip: Whenever you feel your concentration flagging, remember what it is you love about the task you're doing. Ruminant about its benefits for you and others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What's your favorite feeling? Here's Virgo poet Mary Szybist's answer to that question: hunger. She's not speaking about the longing for food, but rather the longing for everything precious, interesting, and meaningful. She adores the mood of "not yet," the experience of moving toward the desired thing. What would be your response to the question, Virgo? I'm guessing you may at times share Szybist's perspective. But given the current astrological omens, your favorite feeling right now may be utter satisfaction—the gratifying sensation of getting what you've hungered for. I say, trust that intuition.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): In the English language, the words "naked" and "nude" have different connotations. Art critic

Kenneth Clark noted that "naked" people depicted in painting and sculpture are "deprived of clothes," and embarrassed as a result. Being "nude," on the other hand, has "no uncomfortable overtone," but indicates "a balanced, prosperous, and confident body." I bring this to your attention because I believe you would benefit from experiencing extra nudity and no nakedness in the days ahead. If you choose to take on this assignment, please use it to upgrade your respect and reverence for your beauty. PS: Now is also a favorable time to express your core truths without inhibition or apology. I urge you to be your pure self in all of your glory.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Scorpio poet Anne Sexton wrote, "One has to get their own animal out of their own cage and not look for either an animal keeper or an unlocker." That's always expert advice, but it will be extra vital for you to heed in the coming weeks. The gorgeous semi-wild creature within you needs more room to run, more sights to see, more adventures to seek. For that to happen, it needs to spend more time outside of its cage. And you're the best person to make sure that happens.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Sagittarian composer Ludwig van Beethoven (1770–1827) could be a marvelous friend. If someone he cared for was depressed or feeling lost, he would invite them to sit in his presence as he improvised music on the piano. There were no words, no advice—only emotionally stirring melodies. "He said everything to me," one friend said about his gift. "And finally gave me consolation." I invite you to draw inspiration from his example, Sagittarius. You're at the peak of your powers to provide solace, comfort, and healing to allies who need such nurturing. Do it in whatever way is also a blessing for you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): At age 23, Capricorn-born Jeanne Antoinette Poisson (1721–1764) became French King Louis XV's favorite mistress. She was not born into aristocracy, but she wielded her Capricornian flair with supreme effectiveness. Ultimately, she achieved a noble title as well as high prestige and status in the French court. As is true for evolved Capricorns, her elevated role was well-deserved, not the result of vulgar social-climbing. She was a patron of architecture, porcelain artwork, and France's top intellectuals. She ingratiated herself to the King's wife, the Queen, and served as an honored assistant. I propose we make her your role model for the next four weeks. May she inspire you to seek a boost in your importance and clout that's accomplished with full integrity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The bad news is that artist Debbie Wagner was diagnosed with two brain tumors in 2002. The good news is that surgery not only enabled her to survive, but enhanced her visual acuity. The great news is that on most days since 2005, she has painted a new image of the sunrise. I invite you to dream up a ritual to celebrate your own victory over adversity, Aquarius. Is there a generous gesture or creative act you could do on a semi-regular basis to thank life for providing you with the help and power you needed?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A self-described "anarchist witch" named Lars writes on his Tumblr blog, "I am a ghost from the 1750s, and my life is currently in the hands of a group of suburban 13-year-olds using a ouija board to ask me if Josh from homeroom has a crush on them." He's implying that a powerful supernatural character like himself is being summoned to do tasks that are not worthy of him. He wishes his divinatory talents were better used. Are there any resemblances between you and him, Pisces? Do you ever feel as if you're not living up to your promise? That your gifts are not being fully employed? If so, I'm pleased to predict that you could fix this problem in the coming weeks and months. You will have extra energy and savvy to activate your full potential. ●

The one that got away. A large meteor streaks off the edge of the frame off the coast of Houda Beach. I had it by the tail! The truth of the matter is that this is cropped in from the left edge; for some reason I had the great rock centered. If I had composed it the way I knew I should have at the time, the entire meteor would have been included. This is why my hair is gray. Sept. 10, 2021, in Humboldt County, California.

A few weeks ago, I read about a giant fireball, visible up and down the west coast from the Bay Area north to Washington as it streaked across the sky. My photo heart ached to have missed that one; I was probably watching Ted Lasso instead, or sitting alone with my thoughts. A month ago, as Earth passed through the tail of a comet, my mother passed away and, well, things haven't been the same since. I hadn't really wanted to go out. But the stories of the fireball knocked off some of the photographic apathy clinging to my bones since then. I have a voice that nags at me, "You can't bring anything back if you don't go out," and it had been growing louder. It's just that the next time would be the first nighttime photo I wouldn't be sharing with my mom. "Your mom would want you to go," the voice added. So I did. I grabbed my brother Seth and headed to Houda Beach off of Scenic Drive after sunset. Slowly sinking, the crescent moon followed Venus down toward the Pacific Ocean; it was a beautiful evening, clearer than predicted. The darkness deepened as night fell and the heavens took shape. I'd had a specific idea but I couldn't get the angle I wanted due to the surf, and we wandered aimlessly for a time as a result. I took a few photos, looking for some inspiration that matched my expectations. Suddenly, in the middle of one of the long exposures, a tremendously long meteor streaked across the sky. "Oh, my God!" "Holy shit!" "Did you get it?" My brother asked. I was afraid not. "I think it was too far to the right." We waited a few more seconds before the shutter clicked shut. I checked. To my chagrin, I had only caught about half of it; I'd managed to grab a hold of it only by the tail before it escaped off the edge of the frame. Adding to the mess, the headlights of a car on the road above blasted the view at exactly the wrong time, which wasn't in the plan, though it did allow for a nice reflection — a lot of things that aren't in one's control can happen during a 30-second exposure. My Big One had gotten away. If only I had composed the photo differently. If only. Moving on, I photographed a little more. There's plenty of time to talk between shots as the shutter gathers light and I was about to say something to Seth during one of the exposures when I saw another huge meteor behind him. "Holy fucking shit, there's another one behind you!" I yelled. Pardon me, but it was the heat of the moment. The meteor streaked for about twice as long as my outburst and Seth whirled around in time to see it. Dang it all, though — and wouldn't you know it? This one wasn't in my camera's field of view at all. They were two of the largest meteors I'd ever seen, only a week after the major fireball, and my brother and I were there to enjoy them. Fittingly, when our mother died the month before, it was during the peak of the Perseid meteor shower, which results from Earth's passage through a comet's tail. I might have missed the shot, but I know it isn't necessary to capture every moment. One must appreciate what is given us. ● To keep abreast of David Wilson's (he/him) latest photography or purchase a print, visit www.mindscapefx.com or follow him on Instagram at @david\_wilson\_mfx and on Twitter @davidwilson\_mfx.
